

New Histories of Native and Colonial North America
“New Scholar Series” on Critical Race Studies and Ethnicity

"Blood and Milk: Indigenous Women, Bodies, and Gender in the Colonial South"

~ Talk by historian Morgan McCullough.

Cultural norms guided Indigenous women as they cared for their bodies during breastfeeding and periods of bleeding, including menstruation, childbirth, and postpartum. This talk will examine these women's embodied experiences using spatial and material culture methods. [Above: Detail of a Colonial Carolina seal showing an Indian woman breastfeeding (c.1711) Library of Congress Geography and Map Division]

April 16, 2021 at 8:30AM to 9:45AM EST

Join Zoom Meeting:

<https://conncoll-edu.zoom.us/j/93211459029>

Morgan McCullough is a PhD candidate at William & Mary and a member of the Choctaw Nation of Oklahoma. She studies Indigenous, Black, and White women in the colonial South.

Free and open to the CC campus and guests from the community.

Organized by the History Department with support from Creating Connections Consortium (C3)

CONNECTICUT COLLEGE